Dewey Gathers Convention Support in Florida Election

(By the Associated Press) Administration forces beat back their Democratic critics in Florida and Alabama senatorial primaries while Governor Thomas E. Dewey of New York gathered in more convention support today for the Republican presidential convention.

Senator Lister Hill, Democratic whip, was renominated in Alabama and Senator Claude Pepper ran up a substantial lead in his five-way contest for renomination in Florida. Both men are administration stalwarts and both were opposed by vigorous critics of many of President Roosevelt's policies. In their part of the country nomination is as good as election.

Support of the president figured as a side issue in another senatorial primary, in South Dakota, where Republican Senator Chan Gurney won renomination despite opposition claims that he had "adopted much of the New Deal philosophy."

In South Dakota Governor Dewey picked up 11 additional convention votes. A slate favoring the New Yorker defeated one supporting Lieut. Comdr. Harold E. Stassen by a margin of about 3 to 2.

This brings Dewey's total of pledged or claimed delegates to 239, with 530 needed to nominate at the Chicago convention.

The lineup in the Senate primary races was this:

Alabama:
Senator Hill defeated James A. Simpson, Birmingham attorney, for renomination by 97,618 to 77,230 with only 542 of the state's 2310 boxes, or precincts unreported. Hill called his victory a "verdict of the people of Alabama sustaining and upholding the policies and the principles of our great commander-in-chief, Franklin D. Roosevelt."

Florida:
Senator Pepper was making a strong fight to sidestep a run-off on May 23 which would be necessitated if he failed to win more than 50 percent of the votes in the preferential. With 858 precincts counted out of 1496, the incumbent had 112,178 while the combined total of his four opponents was 104,212.

South Dakota:
Senator Gurney was renominated over Lieut. A. C. Miller by a vote of about four to three. Gurney polled 32,041 to Miller's 23,438 with all but 655 of the state's 1963 precincts accounted for.

In South Dakota's Democratic primary all delegate candidates are fourth term supporters. With their eight votes, there are now 371 pledged or claimed for Mr. Roosevelt. It requires 589 to nominate.

Other results:
Arkansas:
Selection of the state's Republican delegation of 12 was completed but the convention turned down a proposal to instruct them for Dewey.

Florida:
A group of Byrd-for-president supporters was making a bid to carry the state's banner to the Democratic national convention. Fragmentary reports showed that seven delegates pledged to President Roosevelt and five pledged to Byrd were leading.

Indiana:
The state's 11 congressmen—Nine Republicans and two Democrats—appeared assured of renomination as incomplete primary results failed to disclose a strong competitor for any incumbent.

FUNERAL SERVICES HELD FOR THOMAS WILSON

Funeral services for Thomas Wilson were held Tuesday at 2 P. M. at the Kiever Funeral Home. Rev. John K. Abernethy was in charge of the services.

Rev. Abernethy read a memoir, the two hymns, "Asleep in Jesus" and "One Sweetly Solenn Thought" and the poem, "They Never Can Leave Us."

The services were attended by close friends and relatives. Burial was made in the family lot of the Washington C. H. cemetery. Pallbearers were Harry and Ray Hamilton, Ivan Blair, Chester Clay, Frank Dewey and Edgar Wilson.

"It is a strain on the stronger and larger girl, and both are sinking fast. They cannot live."

Mrs. Mary Stierly, the 24-year-old mother of the twins, saw her babies for the first time yesterday. They are joined together at the pelvis, sharing a common alimentary tract and common buttocks. Covered with a sheet, only their heads at opposite ends of the crib were visible to her. Physicians say they cannot be separated by surgery.

Mrs. Stierly is "very depressed, although her physical condition is good," Dr. Gotsdals said. The twins' mother is the widow of a war plant worker who was killed in a motorcycle accident two months ago.

LANTERN OVERTURNS; WHEELBARROW BURNS

When a lantern which had been left as a warning light on a pile of cement sacks on a wheelbarrow, in front of the public library, overturned and set fire to the empty cement bags, about 12:50 A. M. Wednesday, the fire department was summoned.

The handles of the wheelbarrow were burned, together with the empty paper bags and the paper bags containing cement. The cement was being used in repairing the front steps of the library building.

SOLDIER IS TAKEN INTO CUSTODY HERE

THE WAR TODAY

By DEWITT MACKENZIE

We've been told that D-Day for the great invasion of western Europe has been set, and British Labor Minister Ernest Bevin confided to war workers at the week end that he even knew the precise moment, though he dared not reveal it.

It will seem strange to most folk that an unprecedented amphibious attack—an operation which literally is an adventure into the unknown—can be pinned down with such exactness. Still, it is because of its very magnitude and uniqueness that there must be as much exactness as is humanly possible.

However, we can take it for granted that, despite an exact date, the time can be altered to meet an unforeseen emergency. It's obvious that a date which depends to considerable degree on untested elements must be conditional to that extent.

This point was illustrated at the time of our Sicilian invasion. The day before D-Day a freak 33-knot wind developed suddenly, whipping up waves that made hundreds of soldiers sick and worried their officers. Vice Admiral H. K. Hewett, commander in chief of the U. S. Naval forces in North African waters, called in Commander Richard C. Steere, the weather man who always gives the right answer. Steere said the wind would die down and advised no change in plans. But the time of the invasion presumably would have been altered if his report had been adverse.

Barring this qualification as to flexibility, we can be sure that plans have been worked out exactly. While the zero hour can't be guaranteed weeks in advance, what can be fairly well guaranteed is that things will follow a certain course after the zero hour has been reached.

In the matter of ordinary land offensives, operations are worked out to a fineness that's uncanny. Days before a big drive the whole thing has been reduced to decimal point exactness. The maps show just where attacking troops will be at precise times as the line advances. Everything corresponds to this precision. Only in that way can the all-important coordination be achieved along the whole front.

Of course, the best planned offensives are likely to have local upsets, such as some unit being held up by fierce opposition. However, these can be compensated for, as the occasion may demand, because of the precision of the operation as a whole.

Naturally there's a great difference between the orthodox land offensive and the forthcoming invasion which involves land, air and water to an extent that in some respects is outside the experience of man. There will, for instance, probably be a use of paratroopers and other airborne forces on a scale heretofore only a strategist's dream. Indications are that a huge army will be dropped from the skies into areas behind the main enemy lines.

However, there will be nothing

BRICKER REGIME IN CROSS-FIRE OF CAMPAIGN

Aspirants To Governorship In Both Parties In Final Nomination Drives

By E. E. EASTERLY

(By the Associated Press) Gov. John W. Bricker's administration was caught today in the crossfire of rival candidates for governor—both Republican and Democrat as Ohio's primary election campaign increased in tempo.

Four Republicans and six Democrats fought for the right to succeed Bricker, who is campaigning for the Republican presidential nomination.

Headquarters of Lt. Gov. Paul M. Herbert, who is seeking the Republican gubernatorial nomination, announced it would name a rival candidate whose literature, Herbert said, is being circulated by enforcement agents of the state liquor department.

Liquor Director Don A. Fisher, a Bricker appointee, asked for additional information after describing Herbert's accusations as "very general."

Meanwhile, other candidates for governor sketched verbal pictures of how they would operate the state government and how they would spend the state's surplus—if elected.

Atty. Gen. Thomas J. Herbert, Republican, suggested the creation of a separate department of conservation of all natural resources. The division of conservation now is in the department of agriculture. Herbert in a speech at Warren said six other agencies also were concerned with development of natural resources under present laws.

At Alliance, Paul Herbert predicted a long-range conservation program would be set up to preserve the state's dwindling water supply.

Mayor Frank J. Lausche of Cleveland, a Democrat, asserted at Toledo that Ohio's surplus funds should be applied first after the war to the retirement of debts of haphazard about it. Every body of paratroopers will be landed in a spot planned long in advance. Thus where there are upsets, the Allied command will be able to compensate, just as in the case of the orthodox offensive. I dare say the invasion plans in Commander in Chief Eisenhower's hands run literally into volumes of detail.

There's one situation we onlookers must be prepared for. Many confusing things are likely to happen after the invasion starts—things which only the Allied command can understand. Indeed some of the mysteries will be deliberately perpetrated by our command to fool the enemy. At a time of great tension, events which aren't understandable are bound to cause worry, but in the forthcoming invasion there's no need to let them get us down in the mouth.

local governments. He estimated the surplus would total $100,000,000 by the end of 1944.

He pointed out that the money belonged to the people and said there should be "no drunken orgy of spending it."

James W. Huffman of Columbus, Democrat, advocated at Co-shooton that "every cent" of the surplus be used "for the rehabilitation and reemployment of our veterans."

Frazier Reams of Toledo told a Columbus audience that certain Republican newspapers were trying to choose the Democratic candidate for governor so that they could "bowl him over in the November campaign." He did not identify the newspapers or the candidate.

Headquarters of Mayor James Garfield Stewart of Cincinnati quoted the analysis of some writers that Paul and Tom Herbert would divide a segment of the state's vote and leave a winning portion for the Cincinnati mayor.

Frank Dye of Columbus, Democrat, expressed opposition to proposals for purchase of a new state fairgrounds site near Columbus. He said the state had invested millions in the present Columbus site and that no other location with comparable transportation facilities could be found in central Ohio.

Invasion "Jitters"

The other night we heard one Washington C. H. woman remark that she had "invasion jitters" as bad as the Germans probably have.

It is to be expected that all of us are under nervous tension as a result of the weeks of pre-invasion bombing and the constant talk of the nearness of "D-Day." Especially this must be true regarding those whose sons, brothers, fathers and sweethearts are supposedly poised on the shores of England, and perhaps other places, awaiting the command to embark for what is expected to be a titanic struggle.

It is three full years now since American technicians and workmen first landed in Northern Ireland and started work on airports and harbors. Pearl Harbor was only a few months in the future.

All through that area today are millions of trained men, millions of guns, tanks by the tens of thousands, airplanes by the thousands. Everything is there and in readiness.

While all this has been going on, England's Royal Air Force and the American Air Force have been pounding incessantly at German plant facilities, at German supply lines. City after city has been blasted. Air power has wrought tremendous damage on the Germans. But air power can not conquer. Even cities virtually bombed out of existence can not surrender to the skies. Everything has been waiting on a land invasion from the west.

The Russians have smashed powerful German armies in the East, Yugoslav patriots have engaged a dozen German divisions, and Allied forces in Italy have that many German divisions tied up, too. The stage is set for invasion from Britain.

When will D-Day come? Almost all political and military leaders have agreed that this is the year. If this is the year, then this is the season. And if this is the season, it will come at any hour of any day. The decision probably will be made in Europe by the commanders on the spot.

Where will the attack come? No one knows that either, except the commanders on the spot. They are going to smash where they can have some hope of feinting the Germans out of position, and then pouring men and material through the breached fortifications in an endless stream. It may come simultaneously on so many different fronts that the German defenders will be utterly confused.

There is no point in trying to guess, or speculate. All that any American at home knows, or will know, is the broad general outline. A high American officer smilingly put the whole thing in its proper framework a year ago in a confidential talk.

"I suspect," he grinned, "that the Germans are thoroughly confused in trying to figure out our plans. I know we are."

may yet be boom times for the building trades in countries where the fighting is done. Never in human history has there been so much devastation, or so many insurance companies ruined.

There will be some areas, no doubt, where the people have been so impoverished by the war, and the devastation has been so complete, that reconstruction will seem impossible or undesirable. Large areas of Italy, Russia and Germany may emerge in such a predicament. Such places may serve a useful purpose, in showing the future world how destructive man can be when he puts his collective mind on the job.

Where wealth or credit remains, however, there may be remarkable developments in modern construction.

Americans presumably will be expected to furnish most of the capital for such rebuilding of a smashed world. It may be time to start thinking about how much this nation cares to put into such investments.

Washington at a Glance

By JACK STINNETT

(This is the first of two articles on Ralph K. Davies, who as deputy petroleum administrator for war holds one of the most important jobs in Washington.)

WASHINGTON—Sometimes the men who really run war-time America go on the headlines. More often they don't. One who never has is Ralph K. Davies, deputy petroleum administrator for war.

He was appointed three years ago (June 9, 1941) by that frost-bitten old "curmudgeon," Harold L. Ickes, to see to it that our oil, gasoline and petroleum by-products were distributed so that they would do the most good in our war efforts.

Since then, Ickes has received praise from friends and foes alike for his handling of the petroleum situation. The reason is simply that the gruff old owl has had complete confidence in and backed almost every major decision of Davies.

Like nature in the case of a vacuum, Davies abhors personal publicity. When he came to Washington there was hardly a line printed that he had resigned a highly lucrative position as senior vice president of the powerful Standard Oil Co. of California, to become just another salaried government toiler in the defense vineyard. His biographical sketch, issued by petroleum administration publicists, was as dry as dust, merely recounting his business background.

It was Davies' job to see first that every Army, Navy and Merchant Marine demand for fuel was met, that no one using oil for heating in the nation suffered critically for lack of heat and that this nation on wheels didn't stop rolling to the detriment of the war effort. He had to fight through the long dark months when our tankers were being knocked off in the Atlantic like ducks in a shooting gallery. He had to make the railroads do what they declared was impossible in supplying tank car shipments to the east. He courted the wrath of selfish motorists in curtailing gasoline supplies.

On the other hand, he had to steer between the selfish interests of major oil companies and constant yelps from the little fellows—the independents. He has had to find the new petroleum reserves, okay the construction of pipelines and more recently determine our war policy in such bitterly controversial matters as the proposed Saudi-Arabian pipeline. The price of crude (which many wish to see advanced from $1.18 to somewhere around $1.50 to $1.60 a barrel as an effort to stimulate new development and to salvage unprofitable wells) is just another Davies worry.

Yet after three years, the major portion of industry, the military and even the public is saying "well done" to Ickes and his PAW. The Army and Navy have never wanted for fuel, within the limits of transoceanic shipping capacity (which is not Davies' job). There have been no reports of any one freezing to death and the nation's 20-odd million passenger cars and fleets of buses and freight trucks have been kept moving on essential travels.

Behind it all is Ralph K. Davies, who hasn't had a front-page headline since he came to Washington.

Contact Dermatitis an Eyelid Trouble

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

THE EYELIDS are composed of very delicate and sensitive skin. This part of the body reacts to irritations and other forms of insult much more readily than the skin of most of the rest of the body. It is probably the most responsive barometer to contact dermatitis.

Dr. Clendening will answer questions of general interest only, and then only through his column.

But, you ask, how do the eyelids come in contact with anything that would cause contact dermatitis? Very simply, because of the human habit of touching and rubbing the eyes with the fingers. And the fingers get into everything.

Have you any idea how often you jab your fingers into your eyelids? Well, the other evening after my attention had been called to the frequency of contact dermatitis of the eyelids, I was asked to introduce a speaker at one of our town assemblies. When he got started speaking I sat on the platform facing the audience.

Rubbing Eyes

It was a darn dull speech and I did not have to listen to him, so, watching the audience, I got out a paper and pencil and made a mark for every time I saw a member of the audience rub his or her eyes. I did this until my arm got tired and when I got home and counted the marks on my paper I found I had 732. There were about 250 persons in the audience so that made an average of nearly three touches per person during one half hour of the day.

This average does not take into account the morning and evening rub eye period—when you first get up in the morning and very properly give the old eyelids the once or twice over, and then again at night, the same thing just after turning off the light. I am not saying this is a bad thing, although touching the eyelids can get to be excessive and a bad habit. I am simply showing how the eyelids get into contact with anything the fingers do and the fingers get into contact with everything.

Caused by Nail Polish

My friend, Dr. A. A. Bennie, one of the four best dermatologists in the country tells me that the commonest stubborn form of contact dermatitis occurs in women and comes from nail polish.

The next commonest is no respecter of sexes and comes from sensitivity to dog hairs. You don't put the dog up to your face necessarily, but you rub it or pat it and get hair or hair secretion on the fingers. This type can be proved by pulling a few hairs off the household pet and putting them on the eyelids when—phooey—in an hour or so the eyelids are ablaze.

Then there is the curling iron for eyelashes. This is usually made of rubber and nickel and Dr. Bennie has shown me in several cases how you can distinguish on the eyelids the rubber dermatitis from the nickel dermatitis.

Of course, the way to treat these conditions is—don't. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.

Infectious Diseases

The eyelids alone swell up at the onset of certain infectious diseases. One is trichinosis, which comes from eating uncured pork. It may seem very mysterious. A young physician friend of mine woke up one morning with his eyes swollen shut. And he felt like the dickens generally in spite of having spent a blameless night. A blood count showed it could be traced to some hamburger he ate at a barbecue. Another infectious disease that may affect the eyes primary is tularemia—rabbit hunter's fever. Here rubbing the eyes while skinning a rabbit is certainly the infectious factor.

The common sty is another condition that may be traced to rubbing the eyelids. Perhaps the eyes need glasses, and that is why they are rubbed. Treat a sty with hot, wet towels until it comes to a head. Then get the pus out and anoint the edge of the eyelid with two per cent yellow oxide of mercury.

CHAPTER TWENTY-FOUR

Colin watched the puzzled Blair. "Anything more?"

"Only one thing. They're using a powerful current for something; the lights in the cabin flicker and go dim but there's no sound of a radio. Colin, something is happening in that room, and the thought that Father could be a spy against his country is getting me down. I can't believe that—I can't. But what can I believe?" Earnestly, a little fearfully, she looked up at him. "What did Father say to you just now?"

"Very little."

"He's hiding something. He's—" The voice was tremulous, and Colin laid a hand on her shoulder. "I know how you feel. There's nothing harder to do than what you're doing now—watching and waiting." He walked the cabin's length, then turned. "Dove's gone to Cross Lake. Do you suppose there might be a chance?"

She made a quick gesture of protest. "You mustn't. Father would hear you."

"I could go in by the chapel." "They've kept the chapel locked, they've been on the watch, one or the other of them, night and day. Almost as if they suspect. Please—it's too big a risk. Can't you wait?"

Reluctantly he nodded. "I'll have to, I suppose." He began restlessly moving about the cabin again, then he asked, "How soon do you start flying mail to Winnipeg?"

"As soon as the ice is thick enough to land on skis."

"Good. You've got a job the very first trip. There's a picture hidden away in Alec's cabin—an old picture of a group of aviators in the first World War, and one of the men in it looks like Dove. I wanted to turn it over to the Army when I was in Winnipeg, but hadn't a chance. I can't trust it to the mails, but we've got to get that picture traced. It's going to be your job to take that picture down and get it into the right hands—someone we can trust to follow through and keep his mouth shut."

"Then I think I know where to take it—to Colonel Dowling in military intelligence. He was up here with his daughter last summer. I guided them. He'd be safe, Colin." Blair's voice was recapturing its old eager ring, and her eyes were bright again with interest.

Looking down into her darkly glowing eyes, Colin pondered; because of one woman he had almost decided to quit Learmonth; because of another, he knew he would not. Whatever the future might hold, he and Blair were allies.

"You look so serious." Her voice brought him back.

He laughed. "I was thinking that there's no one in the world I can be myself with so completely as I can with you. You're a grand pal, a—"

She laid her hand against his mouth. "Call me 'little sister' again, and I'll scream."

That night the storm broke. Howling down from out the north, the first great winter blizzard whipped across the land, driving men and animals to shelter. Steadily, through the night, the temperature fell, and all next day no living thing went forth, while snow sifted high amid the spruce clumps, and ice crept out from the shallow waters of the shoreline to meet across the channels, covering rivers and lakes with an ever-thickening cap that would soon become a highway for trapper and hunter.

By early morning of the second day the snow had ceased, and torn clouds revealed the cold, sparkling stars, but hour by hour the grip of winter tightened, and with the sunrise Learmonth looked out upon a changed white world—the winter world of the North.

The day after freeze-up, Colin turned the photograph over to Blair, and on her first trip to Winnipeg she had delivered it into Colonel Dowling's hands. "He's having copies made," she told Colin. "He wants to send one of them to London. It may be two or three weeks before we hear anything."

Colin nodded. "The minute you do hear, fly over to the cabin. And remember, if Dove makes another night trip, let me know. Until then, the safest thing for us is to work at our jobs. Your job is flying the mail; mine is trapping."

And the next day he and Alec began to trap. Hanging his steel traps in heavy balsam smoke until the resin had obliterated all man scent, Colin began work ten miles back from his cabin, following a small stream that he had known in earlier days. The main trapping was for cross and red fox on the Upper Nelson, where Olsen had warned Alec to keep away. Alec himself was plainly nervous when they entered that forbidden territory.

"What happens if we meet Olsen?" he asked once.

"That," Colin answered, "depends on Olsen."

Before many days, their lines extended for miles along the streams and up over the ridges, while the great white calm of winter lay across the land.

Colin chafed because nothing was happening. No word from Winnipeg about the photograph; Dove showed no signs of resuming his midnight trips up the lake, and two weeks had passed since freeze-up.

Then, without warning, on December 7, the settlement was shocked by the news flashed up from Winnipeg—the Japanese had attacked the American fleet at Pearl Harbor. Colin heard it late that afternoon from a trapper, and his mind flashed back to the map he had seen in Dove's secret room: it had been a map of Pearl Harbor. The other map had shown the Atlantic coast; would that mean an attack there by the Germans?

Hurrying to Learmonth, he questioned Selkirk and Blair about Dove's activities, but there had been no change. Beyond expressing profound horror at the Japanese treachery, Dove went quietly on preparing his school for Christmas.

Meanwhile, the chapel door remained locked, and Dove did not venture far from the Hall.

Colin told Blair one morning when they met at the trading post, "It's too deadly quiet to last. Something is going to happen."

A few days later, he found himself a true prophet—but not quite as he intended. It happened suddenly, almost without warning, and it began with Tennant's trappers.

For centuries the Cree Indians had held large sections of the back country as breeding grounds for fur animals, unmolested by hunter or trapper. No law, either Indian or white, enforced these natural game preserves, yet the tradition had been respected.

But not by Olsen. Freeze-up had scarcely closed in when the trappers of Dove's school brought word that not only were Olsen and his partner setting their lines in the very heart of the breeding grounds, but they were probably using strychnine!

One Cree dog team had already picked up pieces of poisoned bait and fallen victim; Selkirk's chief trapper had lost a dog on the trail near Olsen's main trap line. Worse followed.

Regardless of prior rights, Tennant's trappers, encouraged by Olsen's example, invaded the richest trapping grounds, and on two occasions ripped out the traps of Indians already there, smashing them or throwing them into air holes in the lake.

At last the Creees protested; then—some said on Dove's advice—they turned to swift retaliation, demolishing miles of lines set out by Tennant's gang.

The culmination came when a score of younger Creees and breeds burned Olsen's cabin, destroying a store of food and a number of green pelts already caught. Vowing vengeance, Olsen began rebuilding, and the next morning another Cree dog team had made their last meal on whitefish sprinkled with strychnine.

Like wildfire the unrest spread to remote sections. Clashes on the trail brought three Indians to Benedict's hospital, and the country was rapidly dividing up into warring camps. Among the Creees there were threats against Tennant's life; and, when the white trappers openly talked of burning down the school, Dove sent an appeal for protection to Winnipeg. By late December, six mounties had come by plane to Learmonth—the last patrols from the south shore of the bay.

None knew where or when the next flare-up might come, or how far it might spread—whites and breeds alike were living a war of nerves.

Newspapers of the larger Canadian cities took up the fight, some siding with the Indians; others, glad of a chance to attack the Indian Department, supported Tennant's trappers and demanded adequate protection for "modern pioneers trying to open up the wilderness."

Lewellen-Steed Vows Are Exchanged in First Baptist Church Before Several Guests

A quiet ceremony marked in its simplicity united in marriage Melba Janett Lewellen, daughter of Mr. C. L. Lewellen of West Court Street to Pfc. James Steed, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Steed of Washington Avenue.

The single ring vows were read in the First Baptist Church at seven o'clock, Tuesday evening, in the presence of several invited close friends and relatives. Officiating was Rev. H. B. Twining, pastor of that church. The church altar was banked with tall floor baskets of lilacs and centering was an arrangement of tulips.

Attending the bride as maid of honor was Miss Doris Steed and performing the duties of best man was Mr. Beryl Ellis.

For her marriage the bride wore a flowered silk crepe frock, with chalk white accessories. She carried a sweetheart bouquet of daintily-shaded cut flowers.

The maid of honor was wearing an orchid two piece suit, with chalk white accessories and also carried a sweetheart bouquet of cut flowers.

Joy Circle Meets For May Session At Wood Home

Miss Mary Elizabeth Wood was hostess to the members of the Joy Circle, of the First Baptist Church, for the May meeting, over which the president, Mrs. Nell McLean, presided.

The opening of the meeting was followed by a program and devotional service by Miss Wood, Miss Lorie Merritt, Miss Mary Jane Townsley, assisted by Miss Alice Townsley. During the program colored slides were used to illustrate each point. The title of the program was "America's All-American College" which told of the origin and activities of Bacone College, Bacone, Okla., which is the Baptist college for the American Indians, which is the only school in the world above high school for the training of the Indian. This is a co-ed junior college.

During the devotional period the slides were again used, and the hour was supplemented by a vocal solo by Miss Merritt, accompanied by Miss Wood.

Seasonal refreshments were served at the close of the meeting by the hostesses, assisted by Mrs. Harry Wood.

Tuesday Club's Meeting Was an Enjoyable Session

Mrs. Frank Jackson, always the perfect hostess, entertained the members of the Tuesday Kensington Club at her spacious home on West Market Street, and one guest, Miss Lillie Henkle of Lima, was included with the members for the delightful afternoon.

The members spent the afternoon chatting over their needlework, as is the club custom, and many members took advantage of the lovely spring afternoon to attend this most enjoyable session of the fortnightly club.

Later in the afternoon, the hostess invited her guests to the attractively-appointed dining room where one long table and two smaller ones were tastefully appointed for the dessert course serving. As in the living room, in the dining room were seen masses of spring blooms from the Jackson gardens. Centering each serving table were watergarden arrangements of these flowers.

The guests departed late in the afternoon thanking their hostess for a most enjoyable session. Assisting the hostess throughout the session was Mrs. Grace Goodwin and Mrs. Hoy Simons.

Mary Jean Gage Is United In Marriage Monday Eve To Pfc. Donald Schwaigert

Friends here will be interested to learn of the marriage of Mary Jean Gage, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Gage of West Market Street to Pfc. Donald F. Schwaigert, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Schwaigert, of near Mt. Sterling.

The single ring ceremony was performed in the First Christian Church Monday evening at eight-thirty o'clock by the Rev. George H. Robertson, in Mt. Sterling. Attending the bride as maid of honor was Miss Eleanor Hook of Columbus and best man was Mr. James Housman.

For her marriage the bride wore a white two-piece suit, with blue and black accessories. At her shoulder was pinned a shoulder corsage of gardenias and red roses.

The maid of honor was wearing an aqua frock with black accessories and her flowers was a shoulder corsage of Talamas roses.

The bride and bridegroom left immediately following on a short wedding trip and have now returned to the Schwaigert home for a few days.

The bridegroom will return Thursday to his station at Camp Roberts, Calif. Prior to entering the army he was affiliated with the Ranco Agency in Columbus. He has been in the army sixteen months.

The new Mrs. Schwaigert is a graduate of Washington High School in 1941 and attended Ohio University, in Athens. She is now employed as music supervisor in the Madison Mills school and will continue her duties there.

They are receiving the best wishes and felicitations of their many friends and relatives here and elsewhere.

The Crusaders Class of the Church of Christ was entertained on Monday evening at the home of Rev. and Mrs. R. Byron Carver.

Miss Mary Jane Hyer, class president, conducted the lengthy business meeting with Miss Marjorie Swartz leading devotionals. Plans were made for a covered dish supper and a bicycle treasure hunt and party. This party will climax the capsule friend contest promoted by the class.

"Spring House Cleaning" was the theme used by the gracious host and hostess for the social hour following the meeting and was carried out with several clever contests and games. Tempting refreshments were served at the close of the social hour, with guests enjoying informal visiting until a late hour when they departed after thanking their hosts for a most enjoyable evening.

Three Birthdays Honored At Family Dinner Here

When Mr. and Mrs. Willard Foute entertained at their country home with a birthday dinner it honored the anniversaries of their daughter, Mary, Mrs. James Miller and Mrs. Edward Corzatt. Those present with the honored guests and host and hostess were Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Foute, Mr. and Mrs. John Corzatt, Leesburg, Mr. and Mrs. James Miller of South Solon, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Corzatt, son, Bobby Gene, Mr. and Mrs. Norman Foute, Harold Foute and the host and hostess.

BROWN CRUMBS
When caught without cheese to sprinkle on a dish before popping it in the oven, substitute bread crumbs. They will brown nicely and add flavor.

George Lansings Hosts At Basket Dinner Party

A basket dinner was held and enjoyed at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Lansing in Yatesville, the occasion being to celebrate three birthdays.

The serving table was laden with a number of good dishes, which were thoroughly enjoyed, at the conclusion of which games and visiting occupied the remainder of the afternoon.

Many guests were present for the afternoon.
